

VENEZUELA: EARTHQUAKE

More than two weeks after the 24 June magnitude 7.2 and 7.5 earthquakes in Venezuela's north-central region, authorities report 3,889 people dead, 16,740 injured, and 6,462 rescued, with more than 1,100 aftershocks recorded. As of 9 July, 87 transitional camps remain supporting 16,891 people across Caracas, La Guaira and Miranda. International Urban Search and Rescue teams have begun demobilizing as national Civil Protection authorities take over remaining operations. Following visits to affected communities and meetings with national and international humanitarian partners, UN Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs and Emergency Relief Coordinator Tom Fletcher announced an appeal for an additional US$298 million to meet the needs of 1.3 million people over the next six months.

Priority needs remain concentrated in shelter, health, water, sanitation and hygiene (WASH), protection, mental health and psychosocial support. Save the Children has raised concerns about the wellbeing of the roughly 680,000 affected children, with parents and psychologists reporting signs of acute distress. The UNHCR-led Protection Cluster's latest analysis also points to heightened risks of family separation, gender-based violence, and exclusion from assistance among children, women, older persons, and people with disabilities, driven by overcrowded shelters, disrupted family and community support networks, and service gaps for those sheltering informally outside designated camps. As the emergency phase winds down, humanitarian actors are prioritizing expanded access and stronger capacity to identify and respond to these risks going forward.

HAITI: VIOLENCE & DISPLACEMENT

Two separate waves of armed violence in Haiti's Ouest Department displaced an estimated 7,168 people over the first week of July. Clashes on 1 July in the localities of Pinso and Grand-État, Ganthier commune, displaced 1,328 people (262 households), all of whom took refuge with host families within the municipality. In Kenscoff, attacks beginning the night of 4-5 July and spreading on 8 July displaced 5,840 people (1,836 households). The violence, which resulted in loss of life, house burnings and kidnappings, also forced three pre-existing sites to close, displacing people previously displaced. The majority are sheltering with host families while 14 per cent moved into two sites. The incident marks the area's largest displacement event since February 2025.

COLOMBIA: FOOD SECURITY

A combination of weather shocks, localized insecurity and price pressures are driving food insecurity in parts of Colombia. According to FEWS NET's latest outlook, crisis (IPC Phase 3) levels of food insecurity are expected to persist through January 2027 in the departments of La Guajira and Chocó. In La Guajira, developing El Niño conditions are worsening drought impacts on livestock and crops, while in Chocó, persistent flood risk and insecurity continue to disrupt river transport and market access, particularly in the Baudó subregion. The population requiring humanitarian food assistance across the country is expected to rise gradually to between 4.0 and 4.99 million people, with poor rural, Indigenous, Afro-Colombian, Venezuelan migrant, and informal urban households identified as populations of highest concern.
